Italian Eateries Explained

Types of Dining in Italy

Bar or Snack Bar

Central to Italian culture, coffee is the primary product served at bars. Caffe' is the word Italians use to describe espresso. If you are looking for brewed coffee, request un caffè Americano (cah-fey Ah-mer-ee-cah-no). It is typical to pay first at the cassa (cashier counter) and then present your receipt to the barista while repeating your order. A small tip of one euro or less is customary. The tip is placed, in advance, on top of the receipt on the counter.

Receipts without tips may be ignored, so it is wise to place a tip.

Bars also typically serve alcohol, pastries and small snacks. Many bars also serve gelato and chocolates.

Trattoria

These are small, family owned restaurants that usually offer a simple menu consisting of local favorites. Trattoria's are a typically more economical than a full ristorante, yet more expensive than a tavola calda. Usually you can expect table service that is more of a 'down home' experience.

The trattoria is an excellent choice if you would like to experience the local culture and flavors.

Tavola Calda

Literally translated, tavola calda (tav-oh-la call-dah) means 'hot table.' These eateries are generally quite economical and offer the best chance of popping in for a quick bite. They generally lack table service, and if there is any table service it will be very basic – perhaps fetching drinks. These are the fastest eateries because the simple menu is pre-prepared and served cafeteria-style. A tavola calda is good choice for a fast, economical lunch.

Ristorante

The Italian Ristorante is a full-blown dining experience. Plates are generally served a la carte and full service is the norm. There are a wide range of ristorante experiences available from casual to ultra-posh and one should be aware and dress accordingly.

Be aware that at most ristorante's there will be a servizio and a gratuito on the bill. Servizio is a place-setting charge for each diner, usually 3 Euro or less, while the gratuito is a gratuity or tip. It is wise to inspect the bill to find what amounts have already been added in these categories and then add an appropriate additional tip if service met or exceeded your expectations.

Rosticceria

These small road-side rotisseries are quick, easy, and tasty. Usually, there is very limited or no seating and relying on a take-away or stand-up model. Typically, chicken and turkey are skewered and rotisserie broiled over a wood-burnt fire. The poultry is seasoned with salt and pepper, and in some places special mixtures of seasonings and fresh herbs. Simple frittura (deep fried) side dishes and patatine (chips and crisps) are offered to accompany the chicken. On occasion, I have also seen red meats and even fish offered at a Rosticceria.

Gelateria

Ahh, the vita dolce... Ice cream shoppes. However, Italian gelato is not ice cream proper. It is made with lighter cream and milk and incorporates rich and intense flavors to compensate. Generally, apart from the ubiquitous packaged frozen treats, each gelateria makes its own offerings. This makes gelato tasting akin to wine tasting - there are many subtle differences to be discovered and appreciated.

Pizzeria

I have heard my Italian friends say a day without pizza is like a day without sunshine (also, substitute 'pasta' for pizza and it will still be a commonly heard expression). Generally, the pizzeria will have an extensive pizza menu and some simple pasta offerings. The service is take-away to full sit-down table service.

The epicenter for outstanding pizza is, with absolute certainty, Naples. The Neapolitans have built a culture around their outstanding style of pizza. If you go to Napoli, visit pizzeria Brandi downtown. Try a few different Neapolitan pizzeria's. A pizza experience in Naples is a must! If you are more than 50 Km outside of Naples, the Italian pizza is still good, but in our collective opinion, the experience just isn't the same.

Panioteca

Simply put, this is a sandwich shop and/or bakery. The panioteca is a good choice for a quick, economical lunch. However, be advised that Italians generally serve their sandwiches simple. In this case, simple means that the sandwiches are generally not served with vegetables (i.e. lettuce, onion, tomato, pickles, etc.). There are sandwiches that have tomatoes, but they follow commonly accepted naming conventions throughout Italy. For example, a Caprese sandwich will be made with mozzarella di buffola, tomatoes, and fresh basil. So, if you were looking for a ham and mozzarella sandwich with tomatoes and basil, you would request un panino Caprese con prociutto cotto.

Pasticceria

A pasticceria is a bakery or pastry shop. If you have a sweet tooth, this could be the place for you.

However, American's be warned that sweets in Italy are generally not quite as sweet as comparable products in the USA. I have found that many times the confections are a treat to the eyes, but leave my craving unfulfilled. Some pastries that I have found to be agreeable to my, embarrassingly American, tastes are sfogliatella ricci (Sf-ohl-ee-ah-tell-uh ree-kee) – a flaky pastry filled with a creamy custard filling, and cornetti di ciccolate (korn-et-tee dee chick-oh-lah-tay) a chocolate or Nutella filled croissant pastry.

Osteria

These are small, family owned restaurants and inns that usually offer a simple menu consisting of local favorites. Osteria's, though not always, are sometimes the outgrowth of a bed and breakfast type of operation. Osteria's are a typically more economical than a full ristorante, yet more expensive than a tavola calda. Usually you can expect table service that is more of a 'down home' experience.

The osteria is an excellent choice if you would like to experience the local culture and flavors.
